

Creating Strong Classroom Assessments: Professional Development

Assessment occurs every day as part of classroom instruction. Teachers use assessments to determine where students are in the learning process and to target instruction. But how can we be sure that classroom assessments are telling us what we think they are telling us?

To answer this question, join the Offices of Assessment and School Improvement for free professional development targeting strong practices in classroom assessment! Bring your own classroom assessment(s) to work through strategies for evaluating and improving data collection. Assessment and School Improvement staff will share best practices and facilitate discussions in small working groups.
